

I love my device because I can say pretty (much?) anything to everyone

Over the years I have been on a good number of committees including being a school governor for a special school and a trustee for a local sport and activity club

I started using a communication device which opened up a new world for me including being able to speak to my family over the phone and telling them what I had been doing

It is good (having it on my chair) because when I am moving I can still talk

Young adults who use AAC told us the difference using a communication aid has made in their lives

I have been given the opportunity to be a role model for other AAC users.

(At a party) I have an Uncle who tipped my wheelchair on its back with me in it having a joke. When I got back up, I could get my communication device and give my Uncle some cheek which everyone heard.

I often get bits of shopping from town by myself, and I have my communication device so that I can speak to the shop assistants if I require help.

Co-presenting training workshops on communication devices and giving talks actually about being an AAC user.

I believe that I couldn't do things like this without my communication device.

I would not be able to communicate with others, share my ideas, express my opinions and form new friendships.
